place in the world is a town in the trail of a retreating army. Every train was loaded with stragglers or sick and wounded soldiers, and the whole town was in a continual state of disorder, which interfered materially with my operations. I thought if I were to run things I would put a stop to stragglers going through and restore some sort of order. In order to do this I gathered up a few straggling soldiers and organized a guard, which I increased from time to time with others that came along. In this way I policed the railroad stations and the thoroughfares of the town and I soon cleared out the rabble and had quiet and order. No one seemed to dispute my authority and I secured perfect control. Not a train entered or left Chattanooga without my orders. I remember during a cold rain in March while I was there some of the guards came to me and complained of suffering for wood. There was a large frame building in front of where I stood and I pointed to it and remarked that I would not suffer long with that much wood near me. Next morning the whole house was gone..

"Later I surrendered my authority over Chattanoogn, which never been questioned. Somes in the course of my reading I seen it asserted that not a sin a hundred receiving an order s stop to question the authority, I concluded that I had a favo opportunity to make a test of truth."
